GREATEST RELIGIOUS BODY

Of Any Protestant Denomination Represents Three Million Commu nicants and Twelve Million Adherents—Great Ecclesiastical Parlis ent the Scene of Notable Forensio

Aside from sectarianism, and even religion itself, the assembling of the "governing conference" of the Methodist Episcopal church will be a current event of general public interest. The great constituency represented and the large monetary interests involved, together with the personnel of the body, give it an unusual importance. The gomewhat bewildering statistics can be put in a nutshell. In round numbers there are three million communicants. and on a moderate estimate twelve mil lion adherents. Three million are en-relled in the Sunday Schools, and two million more in the Epworth League. There are seventeen thousand ordained and fourteen thousand local ministers. The value of church and parson-age property is one hundred and thirtyfour million dollars. The publishing-house, quaintly called the "Book Concern, has had a unique history. Start-ing with a borrowed capital of six hundred dollars, it now has assets of three million five hundred thousand dollars, and has paid out of its earnings to account of salaries of bishops and the support of superannuated preachers the aggregate of four million dol-lars. Since 1845, when, under a decision of the supreme court, the assets were divided between the Church North and the Church South, the gross In its various educational plants the church has thirty million dollars invest In the last quadrennium five million dollars were raised for missions besides large sums for other benevolences. Meditating on figures like these, Thomas K. Beecher once exclaimed in his characteristic style: "I feel the earth tremble as the charlots and horsemen of this great Christian army go thundering by. I know where they came from: and the camps they have left and the victories they have won. The general conference having plen-

The general conference having plen-nry power over these great interests is a most uncommon affair. It is fellow-less among ecclesiastical bodies. It is an evolution. The germ-cell was the informal meeting of the pioneer itiner-ants in the days of colony and revolu-tion, to "confer" about their work. Out of this slowly, and by almost impercep tible degrees, has grown this most unique body. It is supreme court, electoral college, and legislature all in one many years it was the last tribunal to which a convicted preacher could appeal. But as the conference met only once in four years, delay of hearing was felt to be a grievance, and wher cases finally came to trial they were found to consume time needed for other interests. To obviate this, a system of appellate courts was provided which has proved altogether satisfac-tory. The right of trial on appeal, however, really inheres in the general con-ference, which could abolish the appellate courts at its own discretion.

legislative body of the church. It has practically a carte-blanche to make rules and regulations, except in matters of faith. It is inhibited from alter-ing the articles of religion and introducing new standards of doctrine. The other "restrictive rules" limiting the power of general conference can be set aside by a three-fourths vote of the annual conferences and a two-thirds vote of the general conference. These rules relate to the ratio of representation, episcopacy, general rules, rights of trial and appeal, and disposition of the proceeds of the publishing-house.

This great ecclesiastical parliament has been the scene of some famous debates, continued through days and even weeks of its sessions. Before the war it vied with the national Congress as an arena for the forensic eloquence attempted division of the state was foreshadowed by a real disruption of the church, which occurred in 1844. Another but much smaller bone of contention was the presiding eldership The effort was to make the office an elective one, and thus limit the power of the episcopacy in the interest of democracy. Though introduced in successive general conferences and advocated with ability, the measure failed and its failure caused the first secession from the church, which, however as comparatively insignificant. failure is more than offset by the suc cess of lay delegation. Though repeatedly affirmed inexpedient by the general conference, it was finally adopted in 1873, after protracted agitation. first time the seating of lay delegates in equal number with the ciericals.

The legislative, however, suffers in public interest in comparison with the elective function of this body. The general conference has in its gift the life office and emoluments of the episcopacy. The Methodist world awaits the vote with almost as much interest as the Catholic world awaits the decision of the college of cardinals. In addition to choosing the bishops, the conference elects for a term of four years four book agents and twenty editors of religious periodicals. The aggregate salaries paid to bishops, agents, and editors is not far from $175,000 per annum. That this elective function of the general conference is hostile to efficiency in the discharge of its legislative duties is a palpable fact. All effort, however, to take the elections out have signally failed. The only exception is in the case of the secretariat of the Ep worth League, which has been allowed to remain in the 'board of control where it recently originated. The proposition to elect agents and editors by the book committee has not been garded with favor, though that commit tee is a large, dignified, and represents tive body of ministers and baymen. It is unlikely that the general conference will ever surrender its elective func-

The twenty-third delegated general conference will meet in the Auditorium, Chicago, May 2. Bishop Stephen M. Merril, of Chicago, as the senior ef-fective bishop, will call the body to or-der. There will be nearly seven hundred members. Almost svery country of the world will be represented, in many instances by native converts in the mission fields. Every interest of church polity and life will be passed in review, and important elections will follow. The Auditorium will be the Mecca of Methodists for a month.
